All that eggnog, snow, yummy food, holiday cheer and opening of presents sees to get people excited. However, there is one aspect of Christmas that tends to put a damper on things. I will never forget one snowy Christmas morning when I was about 13 years old. There were several Christmas presents under the tree that were not there the night before. Naturally I wondered where they came from and had to inspect a little closer. I spotted the tag on all of them and it appeared they were from my stepbrother. He had went out and purchased a real gift for everyone in our family. This was naturally an utter shock since he was only 17 years old. Why all of the sudden did he want to buy gifts for everyone? Regardless of where he found his Christmas spirit, I chose to tear open my gift and see what exactly it was. As it turned out, the large box only had a pack of Bubblicios in it. Needless to say, so did everyone else's. Now that's what cheap Christmas presents are not all about. Sure, he got away with spending very little, but no one really wanted the gum. Anyway, he found the whole situation hilarious. Go figure!

The subject of cheap Christmas presents is a rather tough one and certainly varies from person to person. What some folks want to receive on Christmas, others do not.
